

JustIn Thermos

The Interviewer:

Hej, can You introduce Yourself - how are You?

The Squirrel:

I wear my miniature black top hat, at my work as a guide, a conductor for haunted & lost souls that pass through, in an old library with ancient books. The library is in a very large and old oak. I'm very proud of my golden pocket watch, yeah almost obsessed if I should be honest. The watch always shows the right time, just in time, many times, anytime, even in untimes and new times.

The Interviewer:

Great times, Ha! But that's not the reason you're here today. Tell us about what you are carrying around in your vest pocket.

The Squirrel:

Of course, but first I'll tell you a tail.

Once I sat outside the mighty oak, an unnamed stranger approached, in a darkgreen cloak, and sits down with me in the shadows. I offered the stranger coffee from my Moka pot that just steaming and humming friendly and gently on the small fire in the middle of my oriental table, just to inform the surroundings that "Now the espresso can be served - I'm just finished with the brewing process, I think you heard". The stranger lightened up and happily outburst: "Everytime!". We zipped our coffee for a long time, and talked of many things. When it was time for the stranger to break up and follow the road to someplace somewhere else, the stranger pulled a glowing darkblue metal cylinder from his backpack and handed it to me gently. "This is a gift from me to you. This gift is for those who gifted others, so they can continue to gift others in the time of the future". And off the stranger went, never to be seen again by the mighty oak.

... and, yeah, this gift that I got, this glowing cylinder, is a magic Thermos. A very blessed magic thermos, 'cause everytime I want an espresso, or three, it's always enough in thermos - and it's always fresh, magnificent and newly brewed! Enchanting indeed! And as this wasn't enough - the thermos fits into my vest pocket!

The Interviewer:

An endless espresso supply in your vest pocket! That's quite the tale, and quite the gift. So, this magic thermos, it sounds incredibly convenient for a squirrel with a busy schedule. Does it ever... surprise you? Perhaps with a different kind of drink or a new flavor?

The Squirrel:

Oh, it does surprise me, but never with a different drink. Always espresso, always perfect. The surprise, you see, is in the nuances. Sometimes it's a deep, rich roast that reminds me of quiet evenings spent poring over ancient scrolls. Other times, it has a brighter, almost citrusy note, like a crisp autumn morning when the first leaves are just beginning to turn. And then there are the days it's subtly spiced, evoking memories of grand adventures within the library's hidden passages. It's never the same espresso twice, yet it's always precisely what I need in that moment. A testament, I believe, to the stranger's wisdom.

The Interviewer:

Fascinating. So, it's not just a thermos; it's almost... sentient, adapting to your mood or needs. Beyond the delightful espresso, what else occupies your time as a guide and conductor of lost souls in that ancient library?

The Squirrel:

My time is filled with stories, both heard and told. The lost souls, you see, often carry fragments of their past, whispers of forgotten lives. My role is to help them piece these fragments together, to find the coherence they seek before they can move on. Sometimes it's a matter of showing them a particular book that holds a key memory, other times it's simply lending an ear and offering a comforting presence. And, of course, ensuring they don't get too lost in the stacks. The library, for all its charm, can be quite disorienting to those unaccustomed to its shifting aisles and whispering pages.

The Interviewer:

It sounds like a truly extraordinary existence, guiding souls through the labyrinthine passages of an ancient library nestled within an oak, all fueled by an endless supply of magical espresso. We could listen to your tales all day, but alas, our time is drawing to a close. Thank you, Mr.

Squirrel, for sharing a glimpse into your remarkable life and your equally remarkable thermos.

The Squirrel:

The pleasure, as always, has been mine. May your own days be filled with just-in-time moments and perfectly brewed surprises.

The Interviewer:

And to our listeners, thank you for joining us on this fascinating journey. We hope you've enjoyed this peek into a world where magic is tucked into a vest pocket and ancient trees hold infinite stories. Until next time: Drink Espresso - God bless You. Ciao!

..

af bARdisT LennArrrt.se

+ Gemini (the last part & the images)

© 2025

—

this interview is a spinoff from a Saga af bARdisT LennArrrt + MidReal

